Note on hands

The address and text of the letter, including the subscription, are in Spenser's secretary hand. The signature is Grey's, and the endorsement, presumably added later during the filing process in London, is in a distinct hand. The 'addressee note' at the foot of the letter ('{M}r Secretary') was probably added by Spenser to remind himself, come time to dispatch the packet, to whom it should be addressed.

* 2 WestCh{ester}} damage to the manuscript's right margin here and below has partially obscured the ends of some lines.

* 34 {M}r Secretary] the beginning of this note, presumably added during the filing process, has been lost in the archival binding.
